WHAT IS A FELLOWSHIP?

While the term "fellowship" is used to describe a wide range of programs offered by organizations, educational institutions and NGOs, fellowships are generally:

- short-term opportunities with a defined start and end date – often ranging from a few months to two years
- focus on professional development
- sponsored by a specific association, organization or educational institution
- funded

The IRS defines fellowships as "an amount paid to an individual for the purpose of research." Fellowships are typically paid by monthly stipend rather than by receiving the entire award at once.

The selection for most fellowships are based on skills, knowledge, and qualification to work in a certain field.

Fellowship programs can support a range of activities including:

- opportunities to further explore a particular field of work
- research to advance work on a particular issue
- developing a new community-based organization or initiative
- training and reflection to support the fellow’s growth
- graduate study

HOW TO USE THIS GUIDE

This guide highlights fellowship programs that are related to professional development and employment and provides a sampling of the variety and range of programs available across career fields and industry sectors. (The Office of Scholarship Advising works with national fellowships and scholarships – such as the Rhodes, Fulbright and the Marshall – that require the endorsement of the college to apply. The Office of Scholarship Advising is also your go-to source for fellowship programs that involve graduate study.)

Additional Resources for Finding Employment-Based Fellowships

- The website ProFellow contains up-to-date information for over 700 professional and academic fellowship programs, as well as resources for the application process.
- Professional association websites often list fellowships as well. The Dartmouth College Library has a subscription to Associations Unlimited; this is accessible through the Dartmouth College Library Research Guide for Nonprofits.
- The CPD’s Rotational & Leadership Development Programs Guide contains information on approximately 110 training programs that offer full-time positions post-graduation. A vast majority of these programs are not included in this guide. The guide can be found in the Resource Library in DartBoard.
- Idealist partners with over 100,000 organizations to list opportunities, resources and program initiatives. Use their Search Engine to find opportunities for “All Types” of positions. To find the best results for you, use the keyword “Fellowship” and your area of interest and location.
IDENTIFYING & APPLYING FOR PROGRAMS

Fellowships in this guide are primarily arranged by Industry, with the exception of positions based abroad – which are highlighted in the International Section.

Even if you don't have a specific opportunity in mind, the CPD and Office of Scholarship Advising are available to help you brainstorm potential options as well as potential paths to strengthen your application later.

Career advisors at the CPD work with students and alumni (within five years of graduation) who are applying for fellowships that are employment based. You can schedule an appointment to meet with an advisor directly through DartBoard.

GENERAL ADVICE

- Be ambitious but realistic. Think very seriously about the criteria for the fellowship you are interested in applying for. Highlight the experience, education and qualities they are looking for - and how you have demonstrated them. If you don't have any of the pre-requisites that they are looking for, you may not want to apply – unless the fellowship description encourages applications from individuals who have no relevant prior experience.

There is value in applying - even if you are not awarded the fellowship for which you apply. The very process of applying will help you learn about yourself, clarify your goals and help you build professional relationships with others who share your interests.

- You don't have to be perfect. You do have to be compelling. Your application should demonstrate your skills, past experience and aptitude for the opportunity for which you are applying – you also need to show your genuine interest in the subject matter – and your aspiration to contribute to your desired field.

Often fellowship applications show a trajectory, this is what I have done so far...this is what I hope to do in the future – and this is how this Fellowship will prepare me to achieve my goals.

- Feel free to reach out to past award recipients - especially those who attended Dartmouth - for advice in your application process.

TIMING YOUR APPLICATION

- Positions listed in this guide include general due dates (by month, when available) for applications. As many application processes can require materials beyond a resume and cover letter, it is important to know application deadlines and to plan ahead. We recommend that you begin preparing your application 2-3 months before the due date for employment-related fellowships.

- No matter what you are applying for, your application process will likely either require recommendations or references. Either way, you should let people know before you list them as part of your application process.

You can prepare your recommenders by giving them ample time, the description of the program for which you are applying, a copy of your resume and personal statement for the opportunity.
